

Getting you on Wikipedia & Google — your part

OLAMIDE SAX · A WORKING PLAN

I will submit the Wikipedia page when it's time. This side is your side: the things only you can do, because they depend on you, your performances, and journalists.

Here's the deal, plain and simple.

The one thing that matters

To get you on Wikipedia, UK journalists have to write about you. Not you writing about yourself, not me, not your website — actual journalists, in real outlets, writing proper articles about you.

Wikipedia only gives a page once several independent journalists have covered you. And it must never look arranged or paid for — Wikipedia editors check for that and delete anything that looks set up. So this is real: we need journalists to genuinely find you interesting and decide to write about you themselves.

You're already partway there — you've got the two Guardian reviews and a real award. We need one or two more solid pieces about you, and then Wikipedia is on.

What counts (so you don't waste effort)

A piece only helps if it's:

- about YOU — your story, your music — not an event that just mentions your name,
- in a real outlet — BBC, national papers, established music magazines,
- written by the journalist themselves.

You need two or three of those. Everything below is how you get them.

Your list

1. Land one proper interview or feature about you — this is the big one

A piece where you are the whole story. Here's how:

Who to go to (you're in Yorkshire, so start local — it's the easiest door):

- BBC Introducing (Yorkshire) — made exactly for artists like you. You can upload your music to them directly. Start here.
- BBC Radio Sheffield / BBC Radio Leeds — they interview local artists and do live sessions. Pitch them for an interview.
- The Star (Sheffield — already covered you once, go back), Yorkshire Post, Doncaster Free Press.

- The Guardian NG — they've reviewed you; go back for a full interview / profile this time, not a review.

How: send a short pitch email (template at the end — just fill it in and send). Lead with your strongest hooks.

Your hooks — the reasons they should care:

- Best Instrumentalist of the Year, 2026 Eko Heritage Awards.
- You led live saxophone at a Guinness World Record event in Sheffield.
- Your stage work in ÀTÙPÀ (The Spotlight) was reviewed by The Guardian.
- Your participatory / creative-health work — music for wellbeing, memory, community. A strong human-interest angle, not just "musician plays sax."

Make sure it's about you. When someone agrees, say plainly: "I'd love this to be a profile about my journey and my work." If they ask what to focus on, give them questions like:

- Your journey from Yoruba percussion in Nigeria to Afro-fusion in the UK.
- What Afro-fusion is, and how you blend sax, voice and traditional drums.
- Leading saxophone at a Guinness World Record event.
- Winning Best Instrumentalist at the Eko Heritage Awards.
- The workshops — the wellbeing and community side of your work.
- What you're building next in the UK.

2. Get the BBC writing about YOU (not just mentioning you)

Being in a BBC event article is good, but for Wikipedia we need the BBC to write something where you're the subject. Upload to BBC Introducing, pitch Radio Sheffield / Leeds for an interview or live session. If they do it, send me the link and date.

3. Turn every performance into press

Every festival, show, workshop or award is a chance for coverage. Ask the venue's press person to include you and connect you with journalists covering it. Whenever an article appears, send me the link — I keep your press page updated, and that list is what we hand Wikipedia later.

4. Music platforms & databases (I'll set these up — just send me what I need)

- Make sure your music is on Audiomack / Spotify / Apple Music / YouTube as "Olamide Sax", each linking to your site.
- I'll handle MusicBrainz and Wikidata (free databases Google reads) — I've already prepped your details.

5. Keep your name consistent

Everywhere — Instagram, YouTube, LinkedIn, Facebook, press bios — use the exact name "Olamide Sax", link to olamidesax.co.uk, same bio, same photo. It's how Google keeps you separate from the rapper "Olamide" / "Olamide Baddo."

What we don't do

- We don't write your Wikipedia page ourselves or submit it in your name — that gets it deleted. When it's time, a neutral person submits the draft I've prepared, and an independent editor reviews it.
- We never pay anyone who says "I'll put you on Wikipedia" — fake sources, gets deleted, often a scam.
- Your own site and socials don't count as proof — only real journalism does.

Start here

- 1 Pick 3 targets this week (say BBC Introducing, BBC Radio Sheffield, The Star) and send the pitch email.
- 2 Get your music on Audiomack/Spotify and send me your YouTube links.
- 3 Line up press for your next show in advance.
- 4 Send me every article that appears.
- 5 Once you've got 2–3 strong pieces about you, tell me — I'll get the Wikipedia page submitted.

Pitch email — fill the [brackets] and send

Subject: Story idea: Yorkshire-based Nigerian saxophonist, Eko Heritage "Best Instrumentalist" 2026
Hi [Name],

I'm Olamide Sax (Olamide Phillips Olaniyan) — a Nigerian-born, Yorkshire-based Afro-fusion artist and saxophonist. I thought my story might interest [outlet / your listeners].

A few things that might make a good piece:

- I was named Best Instrumentalist of the Year at the 2026 Eko Heritage Awards.
- I led live saxophone at a Guinness World Record event in Sheffield (the 186-metre football scarf procession with Stand & Be Counted Theatre).
- My stage work in ÀTÚPÀ (The Spotlight) at CAST Doncaster was reviewed by The Guardian.
- Beyond performing, I run participatory and creative-health workshops — music for wellbeing, memory and community.

My journey runs from traditional Yoruba percussion in Nigeria to Afro-fusion here in Yorkshire, blending saxophone, voice and African rhythm.

My work, press and music: <https://www.olamidesax.co.uk> (press kit at <https://www.olamidesax.co.uk/epk>).

I'd be glad to come in for an interview or a live session — whatever suits.

Thanks for considering it,

Olamide Sax
